Chapter 12 Massacre in Virginia, Poverty in England.

Cause	Effect
Opechancanough plans the 1622 massacre.	(on colonists in Jamestown) Hundreds of English men, woman, and children were killed in the Great Massacre of 1622.
An Indian boy named Chanco warned the settlers at Jamestown about the massacre.	The massacre in Jamestown was not as bad as it could have been.
King James was upset because there were to many deaths in Virginia. He set up a government investigation then closed down the Virginia Company.	King James made Virginia a royal colony and closed the Virginia Company.
The Virginia Company closed.	(on investors) The stockholders were wiped out their stock was now worthless.
Virginia was to far away from King James and he had big problems at home to think about.	King James didn't spend much time thinking about Virginia.

According to the information on page 48, why did English people continue to come to Virginia after the massacre of 1622?

- Many are convicts who were let out of jail if they made voyage.
- Some of the settlers are orphans.
- Jobs were hard to find in London so some people went to the new world to find a better life.
